PLAN LONGEST DAM

Harnessing the Father of Waters at Keokuk.

UTILIZING THE MISSISSIPPI

Proposed to Generate 200,000 Electric Horsepower Battery of 30 Turbines.

A dam across the Mississippi river, one that will be the longest dam in the world and that will generate 200,000 electric horsepower, is described in detail by Chester Clark in the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution just issued. Although it is generally known that the Mississippi is being dammed, it is not understood that the work is one of the greatest pieces of engineering ever attempted in this country.

Damming the Mississippi.

The dam is being put in between Keokuk, Iowa, and Hamilton, Ill. It is seven-eighths of a mile long and made of masonry and concrete laid on the limestone bed of the river. The dam will change the topography of the country up the river, making a lake from three to five miles wide and forty miles long. The dam itself will be forty feet high and will run a battery of thirty turbines. The electric power will be distributed by a line 150 miles long and the possession of this abundance of comparatively cheap power is likely to have an important industrial effect on that section of the Mississippi valley. Owing to the fact that there are rapids in the river at this point, the dam will improve navigation, as there will be a big lock over 400 feet long that will lift vessels to the level of the lake above the dam.

Protection of Navigation.

Arrangements have been made with the War Department for fishways and for protecting the navigation below the dam. The water will not be cut off all at once, but the gates to the dam will be closed to varying extent at different times during the night, storing enough water in the big lake to take care of the electric generating machinery the next day. Not all of the generating machinery will be installed at once, but the work will be completed by 1915. Unless there is some larger installation projected in the meantime, it will then be the largest power-generating plant in the world. The whole of the work is of cement and concrete built according to exacting specifications, and destined to be as lasting as some of the old Roman masonry works now in existence.

Reverse View.

From Leslie's Weekly. Mother (near-sighted)—See that disapprovingly intimated across the street. Where can the police be? Daughter (weeping)—Oh, ma, it's Brother Bob!

Mother (swooning)—Then the saloon-keepers have been drugging that poor child again!

THE AGE OF INNOCENCE—Sir Joshua Reynolds

Sir Joshua Reynolds, greatest painter of children, reached the acme of his art in this world-famed picture. The painting is well named. It shows a little girl seated with hands clasped on her breast looking straight ahead of her as though at something that is hidden from older, less innocent eyes. Many a critic has wondered and speculated as to what it is she sees. Her soft eyes and flower face are alike with a wondering expression, in which there is a tinge of wistfulness. In reproducing this celebrated picture the cracks that run through the paint, in every direction, in the original, are faithfully reproduced. They are especially noticeable against the white of the child's quaint old-fashioned gown.

Sir Joshua Reynolds, whose inspiration caught and imprisoned in deathless art "The Age of Innocence" was the eighteenth century's greatest portrait painter. He was the son of a poor schoolmaster. In 1741, when he was but eighteen, he went to London to study art. The first years of his career were a bitter struggle. He painted portraits (whenver he could get a commission for one, at pitifully low rates). At twenty-six he became permanently deaf as the result of a cold caught while examining paintings in the Sistine Chapel at Rome. It was the portrait of an English naval officer that first brought him fame and paved his way to fortune. He was the first president of the Royal Academy, and was knighted by King George III. His average output of pictures was eleven a year. The fact that he exhibited 245 paintings during his later years of activity shows how tireless a worker he was.

APPEAL FOR RIGHTS

Natives of Porto Rico Want Full Citizenship.

PETITION PRESIDENT TAFT

Delegates From Commission of Labor

Here to Urge Legislation

On the Subject.

Because the United States has failed to grant to the people of Porto Rico the absolute right to be American citizens and refuses to guarantee them full constitutional rights possessed by the citizens of the other states and territories, the Porto Rican commission of labor will petition President Taft and the American Federation of Labor to have introduced in Congress a bill granting to the people of Porto Rico full American citizenship.

Headed by Santiago Iglesias, organizer of the American Federation of Labor in Porto Rico, Rafael Alonso and Toaquin A. Becerril, the other members of the commission, have just arrived in Washington and are preparing to present the complaints to President Taft and the officials of the American Federation of Labor.

The charge is made that the lack of citizenship has put the Porto Ricans in the shameful position of a people without country and places them at arm's length in the hands of the reactionary element in the island, which profits by its campaigning that the United States wants to maintain the Porto Ricans as inferiors.

At a recent convention of the American Federation of Labor in Porto Rico, resolutions protesting against the failure of the republican party in power to keep faith with its platform of 1908, binding itself to grant citizenship to the people of Porto Rico, were adopted. The support of the federation was pledged to the citizens in their attempt to have a bill introduced at the next session of Congress guaranteeing them full constitutional rights enjoyed by citizens of other states and territories in the United States.

Recommended by Roosevelt.

The convention pointed out that President Roosevelt in his several annual messages to Congress and in special messages after his visit to Porto Rico strongly recommended the granting of citizenship to Porto Rico. Gov. George R. Colton of Porto Rico emphatically recognized the right of Porto Ricans to full citizenship, and wrote to the federation October 30, 1911:

"I believe that the granting of full citizenship of the United States to the people of the island is the greatest political consideration now pending in their behalf; that it would have a far-reaching beneficial effect upon their lives and activities; contribute more than anything else to their happiness and contentment and thus promote the progress and prosperity of their native island; and has become, through the interests of all affected, an inseparable part of the United States."

It is the intention of the Porto Rican commission of labor to urge upon President Taft and the American Federation of Labor the utmost importance to the islanders of a bill granting them full rights under the Constitution. During their stay in Washington the members of the commission will personally appeal to President Taft that he include in his message to Congress a bill providing citizenship to the Porto Ricans, and interviews will be had with officials of the State Department toward this end.

In setting forth their case Mr. Iglesias said:

"I make particular reference to the constant failure of Congress during the last few years in regard to framing a law as to the status of the people of Porto Rico. This is a question that has awakened the interest of all persons and all the classes of citizens in the island; and it is now an issue as to whether the people shall acquire collective citizenship of the United States, that is, as a people, or whether the object of the administration and Congress is to keep this island as a great factory for the purpose of exploiting cheap labor to the benefit of the large capitalistic corporations of the United States."

The people of Porto Rico hailed the coming of the American troops with great rejoicing. Pledges were made that they would be treated as full-fledged American citizens. From that day to this the people of Porto Rico have received no recognition whatever as American citizens, and this fact, perhaps, out of pure sentiment furnishes the motive force as to why the people of Porto Rico are so anxious to acquire citizenship of the United States, a fact which is certainly accountable for the obstacles met with in the general development of the labor movement throughout Porto Rico.

Oldest bill in the last Congress providing for American citizenship for the Porto Ricans, and a civil constitution in the Senate, after being approved by the House, has contributed more to creating anti-American feeling.

It may be well to state," continued Mr. Iglesias, "that the 400,000 laborers of all classes who are now producing six times as much as under the Spanish regime generally live in the utmost misery, all of which goes to show that this deplorable state causes a very unstable equilibrium in the economical and social standing of the island.

The immense wealth remaining in hand or capital obtained progressively through gain by the laboring masses during the last ten years goes back to the shareholders and proprietors living away from the island instead of being reproduced or utilized for the benefit of the islanders and towns of Porto Rico.

The people of Porto Rico who remain in the island are thus reduced to the conditions of human beings working in a large factory in their own land, only to benefit those who live away from it and who scarcely know anything about it."

The Strength of France.

Paris Letter to London Truth.

Every one desiring peace in the world cannot too emphatically call attention to the readiness of the French for a truce with her powerful neighbor, and to her exceptional recuperative power in the event of an initial defeat—a power, there is reason to believe, never greater than now. Her internal state is, and has been for some time, restless and almost convulsive. But in spite of strikes, food riots and famine prices brought about by the whip-lash over commerce and agriculture given to the landowners of the Cercle des Fourmes Terre and viticultural trustees, France has been steadily evolving and growing in power.

Need I speak of her monetary strength, almost entirely due to the activity, address and resources of her common people? It has for its correlative the irrepressible of her sons, their readiness to take their lives in the hands whether as soldiers, airmen, policemen or apaches—save the mark! She is a ready-made country—no small advantage at a time when the cost of moving huge armies is so taxing to strength. There are no conventional idiosyncrasies—no spurious civilities as to the time of the second empire (and the first empire, too, toward its decline) to stultify the public mind and keep down spontaneity. Girls and young women bred in humble states of life would the acceptor of fashion in the workrooms and warehouses of the Place Vendôme and Rue de la Paix and on the boards of the Francs and the other theaters. Frenchmen of no higher birth have been annexing bloodlessly, save in the sacrifice of their own lives, a new empire, that of the air, inventing submarines, motors, wireless telegraphy, to mount to the confines of our atmosphere.
